Meet Chris the Cartoonist

Hey everybody!

Thanks so much for helping me out with my project!

So here's the deal. I have a web comic that has been online for a long time and I have all SORTS of extra artwork that I want to share with the world. My imagination goes into overdrive and I just can't seem to help myself and the next thing you know I have all of these creatures I create but with no real "world" for them to live in. You see my problem.

So, I was thinking, what if I were to just give my creatures to some smart people and see if they can't come up with something fresh and new that a bunch of werewolves, witches, aliens, zombies, and other assorted figments of my imagination might do. Maybe they all are in a band together, or they run a company of some kind. Maybe an employment agency for out-of-work fictional creatures (Darn it! Our series got cancelled!), or maybe they run a hotel together. Or...See...I have plenty of cartoon creations but I run out of ideas in a hurry!

Here's the dealio. You have my permission to use this artwork in any way you see fit to create an entirely new world for my Ray the Werewolf and all his friends. The only think I ask is that you build a website to promote the fictional company (service?) where they work. Don't hold back on the imagination part! I want this to seem for real. Who knows? If your work is awesome enough maybe we can launch a new website and all make tons of money!! (hahahaha...I crack myself up sometimes.)

For the website here's what I'd like to see:

- A home page with the name of the company (or whatever) and some details about your idea.
- A nice clean design that isn't too, too crazy.
- Some pages—4 or so—that have details on some of the characters.
- All the usual things you'd expect to find in a website. The navigation between pages, a nice big header at the top, the styling details that you would use for tables, forms, and other parts of the design.
- A sample video and audio player.
- And yeah, I need it to look good on phones and tablet devices too.

Is that something you think you can handle? I don't even have name for the website picked out yet, but we can get to that when I see what sort of crazy ideas you can come up with.

So, thanks again and I really look forward to seeing your work!!!

~~Chris
